The Helpful Hornet

"Hurrah!" Little Pancho cried with great enthusiasm as he read the sign which was posted on the wall. "Thees weel be a beeg day for my Papacito!"

"What do you mean, Little Pancho?" asked his friend, Fernando.

"Thees sign, eet says that the fastest runner of all the towns in Chilivania will crown the Queen of the beeg Fiesta," said Little Pancho proudly. "And my Papacito is surely the fastest runner in all of Chilivania."

But when Little Pancho raced home to tell Pancho Vanilla the exciting news, Pancho merely yawned widely and stirred in his hammock.

"Papacito!" Little Pancho pleaded. "You must remember that you are the Great Pancho Vanilla!"

"Ho, Little Pancho," replied Pancho Vanilla sleepily, "so I do not need to prove it by winning a silly foot race!"

But Little Pancho made a last, desperate plea. "You will at least take me to see the beeg race, Papacito?" he begged.

"That I will do, Little Pancho," mumbled Pancho Vanilla, and he reluctantly rolled out of his hammock.

When they arrived at the plaza, a large crowd was there, cheering heartily for their favorites in the Fiesta race. The sun beamed warmly down on them, so all were happy and gay — except Little Pancho. He watched the merriment gloomily, while Pancho Vanilla sagged wearily beside him.

Near them, a black hornet stirred slowly behind a scrawny leaf on a ragged tree.

Pancho Vanilla jumped hastily to one side.

"Eet is a hornet, Little Pancho!" he exclaimed in a lively voice. "Don't bother eet! Eet stings very bad!"

Just then, Pedro Gonzales hissed in Little Pancho's ear, "Sol Your Papacito ees afraid to race against my Papa."

This was more than Little Pancho could bear. "My Papacito will race, and he will win. You will see!" he declared.

"Ha, ha!" laughed Pedro. "He could win nothing but a sleeping race!"

Just then, the Governor arose and announced, "The Fiesta racers will run once around the plaza, and the winner weel crown the Fiesta Queen!"

In the excitement which followed, Little Pancho craftily pulled down the leaf on which the black hornet was hiding. Glancing around to be sure that no one was looking, he shook it on to his Papacito's back. The startled insect promptly crawled inside Pancho Vanilla's clothes.

Away the racers darted, determined to win. But suddenly there was a tremendous shout from Pancho Vanilla. "Yahoo!" he cried. "Make way for Pancho Vanilla!"

Bounding into the air, Pancho dashed toward the plaza. The racers were already halfway around when Pancho caught up with them. In a flash, he blazed past them like a comet and reached the finish line far ahead of all the others.

"The Great Pancho Vanilla will crown the Fiesta Queen!" declared the Governor.

Little Pancho smiled joyfully. His Papacito had won the Fiesta race. True, he had had some help, but the hornet was always behind Papacito!
